Being associated with Oriental College of Pharmacy (Batch: 2012 passed out), is something I cherish, more so as I have been associated with it from its formative years. It feels great to pen down my feelings for this institute. I would want to grab this opportunity to express my gratitude to all the dear professors and supporting staff who were the important pillars towards my journey in completion of my bachelors. It also feels great to see how this institute has bloomed over such short span. I wish OCP all the success in the coming years. Whenever I shall be making new strides in my career, this institute shall always be remembered by me with gratitude.

Pratiksha Bhanger

(Batch:2018 passed out)

As someone rightly said " Investment in education pays best interest ". I proud to say that I made no wrong decision in selecting Oriental College of pharmacy as one of my institute for four year B. Pharma curriculum.

The four golden years of my life spent at OCP was a perfect roller coaster ride. I gain the strength to face challenges confidently and emerge out with flying colors. The care and affection with which every member of OCP family nurtured me has set deep gratitude and love for the institution. I benefitted a lot from my faculty members who were always cooperative.

OCP made me recognize my hidden potential, build on my talent and achieve great feats of success in various areas. Today I'm very proud and blessed to be a part of OCP family

Burhannuddin Kagalwala

(Batch:2018 passed out)

“If you want to live a happy life, tie it to a goal, not to people or things.” That goal in my life has been to excel in Pharmacy. It has been the best thing which could ever happen to me. I am grateful to OCP who provided wings to my flight.

“Medicine is not only a science; it is also an art. It does not consist of compounding pills and plasters; it deals with the very processes of life, which must be understood before they may be guided.” Here at OCP we do not just focus on obtaining our B.pharm degree but to excel as an healthcare professional as the health of our future generations depends on us. Excellence drives in the blood of OCP faculty, such complex concepts of pharmacy explained in such a student friendly way. Special thanks to our principal Dr. Mrs. Sudha Rathod for motivating us not only in academics but also in various extra curricular activities like sports, cultural events, quiz & poster competitions, etc. This has enabled us to not only become good students but all rounder healthcare professionals.

My overall journey at OCP consisted of many ups and downs. My greatest fear in life has been failure. That has enabled me to succeed these four years of my B.pharm and now I can proudly call myself an healthcare professional.

My journey through these four years would have been impossible without such excellent faculty of OCP. Thank you OCP for providing me such a strong foundation of knowledge which will greatly help me in my future endeavours. In the end I would like to quote “The aim of medicine is to prevent disease and prolong life, the ideal of medicine is to eliminate the need of a physician.

CONTINUING PHARMA EDUCATION

Geranamine: An Illegal CNS Stimulant

Dr. Firoz Khan

Assistant Professor, Department of Pharmaceutical Chemistry
Oriental College of Pharmacy, Sanpada, Navi Mumbai

Introduction

Geranamine, 1,3-dimethylamylamine (DMAA) has been in the news in 2016 as it was one of the drugs detected in samples taken from Russian athletes. It has also been taken by a number of other athletes over the past decade or so. And most famously of all, it is the substance detected in a sample from a team mate of Usain Bolt which cost Bolt one of his nine Olympic gold medals (and prevented the world-beating achievement of a triple-of-triples for gold medals in successive Olympics). DMAA is a stimulant, people feel it gives them more energy.

History

It was first made in the early 1940s and patented in 1944 by the American pharmaceutical manufacturer, Eli Lilly. They synthesised it in a two-stage reaction starting with 2-methyl hexanone. First, they reacted it with hydroxylamine, forming an oxime by means of a condensation reaction. Then, in the second step, the oxime group was reduced, here achieved by catalytic hydrogenation (Scheme 1). They were trying to make a substance that would supplant amphetamine as a nasal decongestant. Eli Lilly marketed methylhexaneamine under the trade name Forthane from 1948 until they withdrew it from the market in 1983.

Scheme 1: Steps for synthesis of Geranamine.

Natural Source

A study published by Chinese researchers some 20 years ago reported that methylhexaneamine could be found in geranium oil (Figure 1). It does not seem to have been called geranamine until around 2005, when the supplements 'guru' Patrick Arnold applied the term. Some have suggested that giving methylhexaneamine the name 'geranamine' was a marketing ploy, as it could then be termed a 'natural' ingredient, which could appeal to some purchasers, and that people taking it as a performance-enhancing substance could claim they had been taking a natural chemical.

Several studies reported that there was no evidence for it in geraniums or geranium oil, and that supplements containing it therefore contained synthetic methylhexaneamine. However, since 2012 it has been detected by other research groups. It is possible that it is only found in some geranium plants, and it is also possible that some extraction and workup processes to get the amine from the plants may not extract it, or that it may be lost during extraction on account of its volatile nature.

Back into Market

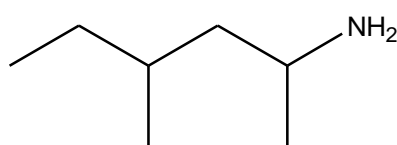

Other stimulants came under suspicion and were the subject of bans, notably in the USA. In 2004, the US Food and Drug Administration (FDA) prohibited the sale of dietary supplements containing ephedrine, and it was in the wake of that, that methylhexaneamine started to be marketed in dietary supplements and weight-loss products. It has also been claimed that it promotes athletic performance.

Controversies

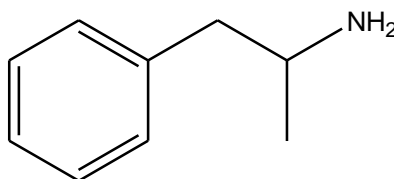

It is on the World Anti-Doping Agency (WADA) prohibited list. It looks as if a number of athletes have been tempted to give it a shot. Apart from the Russian use of it, its use seems spread across many disciplines, from baseball to boxing and from weightlifting to soccer and MotoGP. One of the most high-profile people to test positive for it, during the 2014 Winter Olympic Games at Sochi, was the German biathlete Evi Sachenbacher-Stehle, who received a two-year ban that year. This was subsequently reduced on appeal to a 6-month ban, on the grounds that there was accidental contamination. The 2010 Delhi Commonwealth Games 100 m women's champion Damola Osayomi, lost her gold medal after testing positive for it. In the summer of 2016 it was reported that retesting of blood and urine samples from the 2008 Beijing Olympic Games had shown that the Jamaican sprinter Nesta Carter had shown positive for methylhexaneamine. He had been one of the victorious 4×100 m relay quartet, and when retests confirmed the result in January 2017, they all lost their gold medals (even though three of them had not taken the drug).

Stimulant Effect

It has a similar structure to amphetamines, so it could bind to the same receptor as them (Figure 2). It has been taken as a 'weight loss' supplement too.

Safety Aspect

Not for some of the people who have taken it. It's been linked with episodes including panic attacks, cerebral haemorrhage, cardiac arrest and serious liver problems. There have also been a number of reported deaths linked with it. The most publicised case reported is that of Claire Squires, who collapsed and died a mile from the end of the 2012 London Marathon. She had consumed an energy drink Jack3d, which contained methylhexaneamine. The supplement OxyELITE Pro (Figure 3), which has contained methylhexaneamine, has also been linked with liver problems. At one time, 'party pills' in New Zealand contained methylhexaneamine, and a 20-year old man died after taking two of them, along with caffeine and alcoholic drinks. A 25-year old woman who took diet pills which contained DMAA developed jaundice and required a liver transplant. In April 2013, the FDA has issued warning letters to remove methylhexaneamine-containing products from the market.
