Dear Alumni,

Alumni serve as a window into an organization's history, a symbol of its present, and a conduit to its future. Yes, a great college's value is determined by its graduates. Establishing a helpful network of alumni is essential to the success of the institution. Graduates' perceptions of the university will become outdated if communication stops after they depart. Thus, the term "alumnus" perfectly captures how we at Oriental College of Pharmacy feel about our former students. You are our institution's major stakeholders and brand ambassadors. The 12th edition of our OPAA Bulletin-2023 is being released to commemorate the numerous accomplishments made by the staff and students of Oriental College of Pharmacy during the previous year. It was a year of triumphs and accomplishments of taking on new challenges and scaling new heights. The Alma-mater is always associated with the most treasured recollections. The best time of life is during college. We smile nostalgically at the pointless laughing, dumb errors, and practical jokes. The loving reprimands, the wise words of instructors, and the constant need to return to college and relive those times never go away. Not by returning to college, but by becoming a member of the Alumni Association, one can turn back time. It is re-examining the historical relationship. It is always wonderful to feel a connection to one's alma mater, and the college agrees. It is thrilled to learn of the many accomplishments of its former students after graduation.

It gives me great pleasure to announce that several of our students have passed the PET exam, GPAT exams, and a small number have also passed the NIPER. We are also fortunate that our college has accepted 5% of applicants through the Prime Minister Scholarship Program.

From the 2020-21 academic year, our college has also begun to raise the number of B. Pharmacy admissions from 60 to 100 and M. Pharmacy (Pharmacology) from 10 to 15 students in 2023-2024.

We are working toward NAAC accreditation in the current academic year, which will make us proud. With the help and direction of Mr. Waseem Javed Khan, General Secretary, and Smt. Humera Javed Khan, President of the Oriental Education Society, we are looking forward to another fruitful year as our students travel to find their positions in the world. It is my sincere wish and prayer that our college's students would achieve great things and fly the Oriental College of Pharmacy flag proudly wherever they go.

GREY MATTERS

A short review on premature greying of hair

Ms. Alveera Ansari

Assistant Professor in Pharmacology

Oriental College of Pharmacy, Sanpada, Navi Mumbai

INTRODUCTION

Healthy hair signifies youth and well-being, while its purpose is debated. Hair is a non-verbal communication tool and aesthetic asset, and changes in colour and style can alter body image. Premature greying (PGH) affects self-esteem and occurs at different ages and racial group.<sup>1,2,3</sup>

Human hair colour varies from red to black, brown, and blonde. Melanocytes, which are specialized cells that produce melanin pigment and transport it to neighbouring keratinocytes during the assembly of new hair fibres are responsible for the colour of hair. A reservoir of stem cells found in each hair follicle gives the organ the capacity to biologically renew and manufacture hair for the duration of its existence. Melanocyte stem cells (MeSCs) are closely related to hair follicle stem cells and are required to maintain the colour of the hair fibre by replenishing their differentiated, pigment-producing the next generations.<sup>4</sup>

Eumelanin and pheomelanin are two forms found in hair follicles. The amount and ratio of reddish-brown pheomelanin and black-brown eumelanin influence hair colour. Hair phenotype is influenced by melanosome pH and cysteine content, with decreased tyrosinase activity causing increased pheomelanin and reddish or blonde hair.<sup>5</sup>

Research explores genes and signalling pathways influencing hair pigmentation, with Bmpr2 and Acvr2a receptors influencing hair colour, and reduced activity in mice potentially leading to early greying. Hair without pigment grows more quickly than hair with pigment. Grey hair is thicker, coarser, and more prone to weathering.

EPIDEMIOLOGY

According to a recent survey, 6-23% of adults have 50% grey hair by the time they are 50 years old. Dark-haired people detect greying more easily and early, although fair-haired people seem completely grey ahead of their time. The effects are similar for both sexes.<sup>6</sup>

ETIOPATHOLOGY

Most research has likely focused on the impact of reactive oxygen species (ROS) on hair greying. In the hair follicle, melanogenesis is active during the active growth phase. This results in significant cumulative oxidative stress due to the hydroxylation of tyrosine and the oxidation of dihydroxyphenylalanine to melanin. A decline in pigmentation might result from melanocyte damage caused by the antioxidant effect's failure.<sup>7</sup>

Another disorder that causes early greying of the hair is vitiligo. Vitiligo sufferers have melanocytes that are more vulnerable to oxidative stress. Damage from ROS to melanocytes causes differentiated melanocytes to undergo apoptosis and ectopic differentiation of stem cells.<sup>8</sup> Reversible hypopigmentation of hair is linked to severe iron and copper deficits, chronic protein loss, and other malabsorption-related conditions like nephrosis, celiac disease, and kwashiorkor. Although clinical and empirical findings have shown that people with high levels of stress may accelerate or even cause hair greying, there is not enough experimental data to validate this hypothesis.<sup>9</sup>

MANAGEMENT

PABA, a potent inducer of melanocyte proliferation and melanogenesis, has been linked to temporary hair darkening in some individuals, while hair darkening has also been observed following prostaglandin, electron beam treatment, and X-ray irradiation.<sup>10</sup>

Amalaki (Emblca officinalis), Bhringaraj (Eclipta alba), mooncake seed tree (Sterculia platanifolia), and lotus tree (Zizyphus spina-christi) are traditional remedies for darkening grey hair. Henna is a natural hair color that is derived from the leaves of the Lawsonia alba plant.<sup>11</sup> Melitane is an alpha-MSH agonist and biomimetic peptide. It functions by binding the melanocortin 1 receptor, which in turn activates the hair's melanogenesis process. Another peptide that mimics alpha-MSH is palmitoyl tetrapeptide-20. Research has demonstrated its beneficial effects in reversing grey hair and boosting hair pigmentation.<sup>12</sup>

CONCLUSION

Premature greying of hair is a debilitating condition that affects social integration and acceptance. Future treatment strategies may focus on genes and proteins related to melanocyte biology in hair follicles, potentially leading to semi-synthetic, biotechnological, or natural hair re-pigmentation procedures. Further study into hair greying pathophysiology may provide insights into the aging process and potential intervention targets.

MESSAGE FOR ALUMNI

Dear Alumni

We would like to build a rapport with you by sharing our campus news and getting your professional news with respect to your current organisation, job position and description. We would be extremely delighted if you can come forward and share your expertise with our undergraduate and post-graduate students through guest lectures/expert talks, career guidance, seminars on internship and placement opportunities, research collaboration, giving gift samples for research work, feasible MOU's between OCP and your current organisation in order to bridge the gap between industry and academia. To make this feasible we organize alumni meet every year so as to show our love and affection to our alumni, interact with them and walk them through their nostalgic memories of days spent in OCP, which we are sure you cherish a lot. This gives you an opportunity to meet your old friends and staff members with whom you must have lost the contact after graduation/postgraduation. It would give us immense pleasure if you could be generous with your time and attend the meet.
